Academic Experience

2011- : Research and Teaching Assistant, Ankara University Law Faculty

2017-2017: Guest Researcher, Max Planck Institute for Innovation and Competition, Munich

Thesis/ Dissertation

2018: PhD, "The Law of Restitution in Intellectual Property Law"

2013: LL.M., "Release in Law of Obligations"

Research Interests

My current research fields are intellectual property rights, technology law and protection of private data. I am particularly interested in legal aspects of cloud computing, big data, cryptocurrency, machine learning, internet of things (IOT) and biotechnology.

I am, at the moment, working on an article about data privacy in big data, which I believe will be a unique addition to this field due to my comprehensive approach to the subject which covers technical, theoretical and ethical aspects of the question at hand. Moreover, I also think that my nonconformist approach to the subject and my methodologic style in writing will add value to it.

After this article, I would like to work on some new concepts like the legal identification of cryptocurrencies and a very controversial subject; legal perspective of private data being used as a payment method.

Teaching Interests

I have been working at the chair of Private Law (Civil Law) and I have written on Law of Obligations (Contract Law) and I have taught and assisted in teaching a lot of main subjects like Introduction to Law, Property Law, Law of Persons, Family Law and Inheritance Law. My law education, both during and after law school, covers most aspects of Common Law too. So I am also interested in teaching these subjects in Common Law countries for both comparative lectures (Common Law vs. Civil Law or International comparison) and lecture that are not comparative. Teaching in the areas that I am currently focusing, like Law of Technology, Intellectual Property, Data Protection would be my first choice, but yet since these are selective courses for a lot of schools, I am aware that they would not be my main teaching focus.
